Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev, seen here with war veterans, challenges Yeltsin's declaration that the Soviet Union is dead. Yeltsin's declaration that the Soviet Union is dead. challenged by Gorbachev

Associated Press

MOSCOW - Mikhail Gorbachev on Monday challenged Boris Yeltsin's declaration that the Soviet Union was dead, branding a new Slavic commonwealth "illegal and dangerous" and urging the national Parliament to decide the country's future.

Gorbachev's statement late Monday put him clearly at odds with Yeltsin, Russia's president, who has already taken over much of the Soviet president's power and joined with the leaders of Jkraine and Byelorussia in declaring the new comnonwealth on Sunday.

The Soviet president has proposed to keep some role for the central government, while Yeltsin's commonwealth eliminates it and bans Soviet insti-

Gorbachev's comment came several hours after Yeltsin met with the Soviet leader to discuss the 'commonwealth of independent states" and said Gorbachev might have a role in the new grouping. Gorbachev was not even informed of the plan until after Yeltsin told President Bush.

Gorbachev lately has courted the non-Slavic republics and clearly had them in mind when he said: "The fate of the multi-national state (Soviet Union) cannot be decided by the will of the leaders of three

The declaration that union laws no longer exist is also illegal and dangerous. It can only aggravate chaos and anarchy in society, Gorbachev said in the statement.

The latest evidence of the Soviet Union's disintegration heightened fears in the West about See COMMONWEALTH on page 8

Gorbachev said the plan had some "positive" aspects. He said the Soviet Parliament should decide whether the commonwealth would supplant his proposed Union Treaty to keep the country

Kazakhstan President Nursultan Nazarbayev said he believed the Soviet president "still has not exhausted his opportunities" as a leader.

Yeltsin on Monday agreed to let republics' legislatures consider the commonwealth plan "parallel" with Gorbachev's Union Treaty, Nazarbayev said. It was unclear whether Yeltsin would delay implementing the commonwealth plan.

Federal court overturns Lafferty convictions

Associated Press

DENVER - The 10th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals on Monday threw out professed prophet Ronald Watson Lafferty's two capital murder convictions and death sentences, saying the trial judge applied the wrong legal standard in finding him com-

The state court's finding that Lafferty, convicted of murdering his sister-in-law and her toddler, was competent to stand trial is "fundamentally flawed," the court ruled. However, the circuit court did not hold that Lafferty was incompetent as a matter of law.

..we do conclude that the record contains evidence from which a fact finder could have found him incompetent under the proper legal standard," the court wrote.

Lafferty, a 48-year-old self-proclaimed prophet, and his brother, Dan Lafferty, were convicted in the 1984 killings of Brenda Wright Lafferty, 24, and her 15-month-old daughter, Erica, in American Fork,

The baby's throat was cut in its crib. Brenda Lafferty was beaten and stabbed to death.

The brothers claimed the killings were ordered by God. In a separate trial, Dan Lafferty, 42, was sentenced to life in prison for the same double murders after a jury deadlocked 11-1 on the death penalty.

Testimony from two hitchhikers who witnessed the killings indicated Dan Lafferty cut the child's throat while Ron restrained and heat the while Ron restrained and beat the baby's mother.

Ronald Lafferty's attorneys have submitted nine writ of habeas corpus issues to the appeals court to test the constitutionality of his conviction.

"This likely means we'll get a new competency hearing and a new trial," said appeals lawyer Mike Esplin of Provo, Utah. "And that's just great. Ron doesn't belong on death row.

This is the right ruling."

The question at trial, Esplin said, was whether Lafferty was able to assist in his defense and whether he understood the penalties and pro-

He said 4th District Judge J. Robert Bullock gave Lafferty's defense lawyers an "impossible" task with the competency finding.

"The judge told (trial lawyer Robert) Johnson to make the decisions, except when it came to putting on evidence about an insanity defense," Esplin said. "Then he told Johnson that it was up to Lafferty."

During the trial's death penalty phase arguments, Lafferty told his lawyer several times to sit down. Lafferty believed he would lose powers given him by God if he relied on attorneys, physicians and others, Esplin told the circuit court during oral arguments Jan. 15.

In a 25-page ruling, the circuit court said Monday that competency to stand trial is an aspect of due process, and therefore constitutionally mandated. The standard that must be applied, the court wrote, is that a defendant have a rational as well as factual understanding of the proceedings against him.

"It is beyond dispute that the Supreme Court's legal definition of competency ... mandates the conclusion that a defendant lacks the requisite rational understanding if his mental condition precludes him from perceiving accurately, interpreting, and—or responding appropriately to the world around him," the court

Esplin said Monday that while Lafferty may have understood the proceedings, his mental illness prevented him from making rational decisions about his defense.

The state court erred when it embraced the view that factual understanding alone is sufficient in determining competency, the Denver court

"The very nature of the illness he had was a paranoia which made him unable to assist in his own defense," Esplin had argued to the appeals

However, Assistant Utah Attorney General Sandra Sjogren pointed out that while previous court rulings had determined Lafferty suffered from mental illness, it did not impair his ability to assist counsel.

Special to the Universe

A telephone survey of 500 BYU students has revealed an overwhelming tide of opinion against mandatory BYU health insurance, as well as some startling notions about student awareness and other campus issues, including voting, BYUSA and transportation.

When asked if BYU should be able to require all students to carry BYU health insurance, regardless of any other private insurance they carry, most respondents did not have to ponder their answer: no.

In all, 96 percent of those asked said no, and many were emphatic in their replies. Only 3 percent said BYU should be allowed to impose its own insurance on all students.

On the subject of voting, 51 percent of those responding said they were registered to vote in 1991, but only 11 percent actually went to the polls. Forty percent were not registered and 7 percent were ineligible.

Possible causes for the low student turnout could be the lack of a presidential election this year, the inconvenience of arranging to vote absentee in students' home states and apathy.

Survey respondents were also asked to name the president of BYUSA, but 54 percent had no clue. Thirteen percent gave the correct answer, Amy Miner, and 15 percent were close with Amy Baird, her maiden name.

Another 8 percent knew only her sented.

Editor's Note: This is the first part of first name, and 7 percent knew the president was a woman but could give no further information. One percent said Brett Blake, last year's president, and 2 percent gave other names, including BYU President Rex E. Lee.

Forty percent of all respondents also did not know what college their major belonged to.

On the subject of transportation, 66 percent said they have a car at BYU. That number was skewed, however, according to the students' class stand-

Only 32 percent of freshmen have cars, while 63 percent of sophomores, 71 percent of juniors, 85 percent of seniors and 92 percent of graduate students said they have a car in Provo.

In contrast, only 32 percent named the car as their primary mode of transportation to school. Fifty-seven percent said they walk most of the time, while 7 percent ride a bicycle and 4 percent take the bus.

Again, it was the freshmen doing most of the walking and the upperclassmen taking the car. Eightythree percent of freshmen and only 41 percent of seniors said they hoof it on a regular basis.

Those called were also asked how often they read The Daily Universe. Thirty-eight percent said they read it every day, while 74 percent read it at least three days a week. Only 4 percent said they never read it.

Dedication of new JSB cancels class; Pres. Hinckley to preside

By CARMA BYLUND Universe Staff Writer

Religion classes scheduled during the day are canceled today because of the dedication of the new Joseph Smith Memorial Building, said Robert L. Millet, dean of Religious Education. President Gordon B. Hinckley,

First Counselor in the First Presidency of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, will speak at the ceremony and give a dedicatory prayer. The program will begin at 11 a.m. in the auditorium of the building. Classes were canceled in order to allow the faculty to be at the dedication and to free the building for tours, Millet said. There are only 200 seats open for student seating in the auditorium, Millet said. The dedicatory program will be broadcast in faculty offices, class-rooms in the JSB and over the Campus Cable Network, Channel 25, according to BYU Public Communications.

There will also be open seating for 2,000 to watch the broadcast in the ELWC Ballroom.

Other participants in the program include speakers BYU President Rex E. Lee and Millet, Daniel H. Ludlow, former dean of Religious Education and editor of the Encyclopedia of Mormonism, Robert J. Matthews, former dean of Religious Education and BYU's University Singers.

The dedication ceremony has been advertised to the community, and after the dedication, beginning at about 12:30 p.m., organized tours will be given to anyone interested, Millet said. These tours will be given until about 5:30 or 6 p.m.,

Construction of the new JSB began in the spring of 1990 and was completed 50 years after the dedication of the original building. The new building was designed by John and Dix Markham, the sons of the architect who designed the original building, according to BYU Public Communications.

The 75,000-square-foot building has 17 classrooms, an auditorium, 75 offices, a conference room, a faculty library, a baptismal font and a commons area for students.

On the other hand, Crystal Critchfield, 21, a junior in family health from Sandy, does not recycle, but she feels guilty about it. "A lot of students probably think about recycling and think they should, but don't because it's a hassle," Critchfield said.

Speaking of throwing things away, many of the students surveyed would like to rid themselves of certain General Education classes. "I'd drop physical science," said Camilla Christensen, 19, a freshman in psychology from Winchester, Calif., echoing the opinion of a large number of her peers. Europeans may unite currency by 1999

MAASTRICHT, Netherlands - Leaving an escape route for Britain, European Community nations tentatively agreed Monday to set up a common central bank and to begin using a single currency by 1999.

Leaders of the trading bloc ran into roadblocks in their quest for a political federation of their 12 nations.

Dutch Foreign Minister Hans van den Broek said "insurmountable obstacles" thrown up by Britain and Spain were making it difficult to agree on a political union that would establish common foreign and internal security policies. The leaders led off the two-day gathering by tackling a merger of their economic and monetary policies.

By day's end, their finance ministers struck a deal that set a deadline of Jan. 1, 1999 for the nations to establish a European Central Bank and common currency, officials said.

As part of the arrangement, the European currency unit, or Ecu, would replace the French franc, German mark and other currencies as early as 1997 and no later than 1999.

The ministers worked on the wording of an "opt out" clause that would allow Britain to decide later whether to scrap the British pound for the new European currency. No details were released.

The arrangement must still be formally accepted by the leaders, some of whom hoped to trade their agreement for concessions in other areas.

Bush told AIDS will bring 'bad decade'

WASHINGTON - President George Bush was warned Monday there is "a bad decade coming" despite progress in the war against AIDS.

Meeting with top health officials and the National Commission on AIDS, Bush said the government has "good people working on it" and asked how the White House can be of more help in combatting the disease.

Dr. June Osborn, representative of the National Commission on AIDS, said the disease has been "putting pressures on a lot of our social structures that were a little shaky to start with," including the lack of health coverage for millions of Americans.

"We've got a bad decade coming," Osborn told the president.

Officials estimate one million to 1.5 million Americans have been infected with the human immunodeficiency virus, which causes AIDS. Nearly 200,000 K96.1 FM, while Grow is in the propeople have been diagnosed with the disease and the death toll is nearly cess of changing AM 960's format.

Watkins trial closes amid speculation

NEW YORK — Three alternate jurors in the Brian Watkins murder trial said Monday if they had to vote immediately they would probably convict the four defendants on the robbery charges and acquit them of felony murder.

They said Justice Edwin Torres' final instructions made it clear to them the four teen-agers are equally guilty of robbery, but they thought the murder charge was too severe because none of them actually killed Watkins.

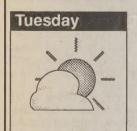

"I have some doubts about the felony murder charge," said Irving Spencer, 42, a Sanitation Department employee who operates a mechanical street sweeper. "I think it might be a bit severe. It was clear they didn't intend to hurt anybody, but after the boy died they started giving each other up.

Mabel Hallman, 39, a traffic agent who lives on the Upper West Side, said she had doubts about felony murder.

"Robbery, yes. Murder, no." she said

Torres told the jury that one who takes part in crime where there is a murder can be convicted of felony murder even though he is not the killer.

Student Review Live: The Radio Show debuted Monday morning, attempting to bring its student magazine-forum format to radio.

Sean Ziebarth, one of SR Live's two voices, said the magazine will use, "A lot of spontaneous stuff. We will keep the same format as Student Review, an open forum for students.

"We need to slowly take over the media," said Ziebarth, a senior from Fountain Valley, Calif.

The show was the first of two 30minute premieres scheduled this week. Ziebarth said Dave Grow, the owner of K96.1 FM, 960 AM's sister station, gave SR Live air time for Monday's 7 a.m. broadcast and Friday's 5 p.m. program for free.

The show, which originates from the station's Provo studio, will then be off the air until January when SR Live will have a set day and time.

In an ironic twist, SR Live now joins ultra-conservative commentator Rush Limbaugh as the station's only real programming - the rest of the air time is filled with a simulcast of

Fund-raiser dance planned to collect $4,000 for needy

Frank W. Fox's American Her-dance. Their goal is to collect $4,000 for the 25 sponsored families, said a committee spokesman.

Todd A. Petersen, a teaching assistant for American Heritage, said, "We asked for the largest families when we went to BYUSA. Usually they are the families that are most difficult to provide for, and we wanted to have a fundraiser that would be able to meet their needs. Class members have already pledged more than $2,000 in donations.

Fox, a history and American Heritage professor, has also pledged to do an "M.C. Hammer dance" in "Hammer pants" — if the classes can meet the $4,000 goal.

The dance will be Dec. 11 from 8 p.m. until midnight. There will be a disc jockey, a live band and a bigscreen television in separate areas of the center court at the George Albert Smith Field House. A donation is required. The amount of the donation is left up to the students — but the committee asks that generosity be the guide.

Local businesses have also donated food and door prizes. "ShopKo do-nated door prizes, McDonalds donated door prizes, McDonalds do-nated drinks and Little Caesars Pizza donated food," Petersen said. Julie Workman, 19, a junior in the nursing program, from Orem, said ShopKo, Storehouse Market and Food 4 Less are also offering food products and merchandise for the sponsored families. "We're really grateful for their support.

"The students felt that it was time to get involved in society," said Bruce V. Christy, 21, a sophomore in graphic illustration, from Provo. The great part about the fund raising this year is that it's the students that took the initiative to do all the work. Last year the teaching assistants for the American Heritage classes did most of the work after Dr. Fox suggested the fund raiser. This year the students have done everything, and it's a lot of work," Petersen said.

Those students wishing to donate who will not be able to attend the dance are encouraged to go to the donation box set up in the American Heritage class or contact Todd A. Petersen or Julie Workman through the American Heritage office at 378-6076.

A World View

Japan, China must lead post-cold war Asia

By YOTORO KOBAYASHI

Since the Meiji Restoration in the late 1800's, progress in Japan has been guided by an official policy of de-Asianization and pro-Westernization. Adhering to this policy seemed a rational and natural course, as Japan was driven to develop its technology and economy in order to take its place among advanced nations of the West

Yet Japan's single-minded drive for modernization took place at the expense of something very significant — the friendship and trust of other Asian nations.

Today, Japan should be pursuing a path of "re-Asianization." This term may easily conjure up an image of Japan isolating itself within the boundaries of Asia, or placing itself at the center of Asia by dominating other countries in the region. This is simply not the case. The re-Asianization I am promoting is not exclusive. Rather, it involves strengthening ties in Asia, while at the same time maintaining close relations with the Japan has at times displayed a lack of sensitivity to the voices of other Asian nations, as demonstrated by World War II. Yet this cannot overshadow Japan's strong relationship with Asia, exemplified by the large volume of Official Development Aid provided to Asian countries — aid which surprised $4 billion in 1990 alone, and which constituted nearly 60 percent of total Japanese foreign assistance.

Rapid economic advancement in Asia began in the 1970s. During these years, the pace of economic development accelerated, particularly for the newly industrializing economies and members of Association of South-East Asian Nations (ASEAN). Some coastal areas of China are also developing their economies.

In addition, trade and investment between and among Asian nations has increased dramatically. For example, Asian imports from Japan increased by nearly 30 percent from 1985-89, while Japan's direct investment in Asia, including China, rose from $2 billion to $41 billion during that same Today, consistent with general trends in Asia, Japan depends less on America as a trading partner because it has diversified its trade and investment in Asia and Europe.

This is a natural and healthy development.
It is not wise or viable for a nation to rely excessively on the market of one country for too long a period.

Within the context of this Asian economic shift from the U.S. to more diverse markets, many of which are in the region, Malaysian Premier D.S. Mahathir bin Mohammed recently advanced the concept of an East Asia Economic Group (EAEG). Behind his proposal are two impending global economic moves: Market unification of the European Community in 1992 and the expected formation of the North American Free Trade Area, a U.S.-lead free-trade bloc designed ete with the EC The Malaysian premier's proposal implies that it is better for a stable world economy to have three economic blocs than two and, because East Asia is fast becoming a sizable economic and technological entity, some sort of formal regionalization is warranted.

As a leading nation in Asia, Japan should support the EAEG if its goal is not to create an exclusive trading bloc, but rather to promote global trade and investment with the region, and if such a proposal is not in conflict with the spirit and letter of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (ATT).

Naturally, Japan's enormous economic and industrial strength may serve as a barrier to making positive moves in the region. Increased Japanese activity may stir up bitter memories of the prewar Greater East-Asia Co-prosperity Sphere. Some may fear that Japan is on its way to reviving the aggression displayed before and during World

Generally speaking, however, today's political and business leaders in Asia are comparatively much younger than their counterparts in Japan. This may mean that there are fewer people who look at Japan with the unabated suspicion caused by the pain they or their forefathers suffered from past

This does not, however, give Japan free license to conduct unrestrained economic and industrial activities in Asia, even though the world community is demanding that Japan take a more active "leadership role" in the international arena.

It does not seem wise for Japan to be the sole leader in Asia. In this regard, China's immense presence in the region must not be overlooked. This nation was not only on the winning side after World War II, it is also a permanent member of the U.N. Security China commands special respect by virtue of its enormous cultural heritage and because it is one of the oldest members of the community of nations. I believe it is prudent for Japan to cooperate with China as moreor-less co-chairs in contributing to the development of Asia. This, I am convinced, will mitigate the distrust that Asian neighbors may continue to harbor toward Japan.

In placing greater emphasis on Asia and endeavoring to improve links with its Asian endeavoring to improve links with its Asian neighbors, Japan must be careful not to slight the United States. Although Japan officially been following a policy of "omnidirectional diplomacy" in relations with the international community, nothing realistically speaking has been more significant than its ties with the U.S.

Japanese progress in Asia would be problematic without support of America. Therefore, it is vital that Japan accompany its efforts toward Asia with comparable efforts towards the United States.

The Japanese people cannot afford to ig-

The Japanese people cannot afford to ignore the fact that there are still people in the West who feel uncomfortable about Japan's continued growth and development. Mindful of this distrust, I nonetheless believe the time will come when the world will not only expect Japan to assume a leadership role, but will also feel comfortable with it. Japan

Beijing, Tokyohave shaky policy on human rights

PRINCETON, N.J. — Beijing rolled out the red carpet for the arrival of U.S. Secretary of State James Baker. The mere visit of a high-ranking official serving directly under the President is very important in helping end the isolation the Chinese Communist regime has suffered since 1989. It also enhances what is left of its legitimacy within hances what is left of its legitimacy within the country after the Tien An Men Square massacre. Now the question is: What will James Baker bring back home in return for such a generous gift to the Chinese?

Sitting at the table in Beijing, Baker met members of the Li Peng government, he also saw shadows of the Japanese behind the Chinese Because the Japanese have an excel-nese. Because the Japanese have an excellent understanding of China and enjoy more freedom to corrupt and buy off Chinese officials, who are so vulnerable to bribery, a pro-Japan faction has long existed among the hardliners within the Communist

A strategy within the Chinese Communists to "unite with the Japanese and confront the Americans" has long been rumored. The Japanese are, of course, only too glad to welcome this. Japan is already China's largest creditor and trade partner, and China's isolation after the Tien An Men suppression brought Japan golden opportunities to monopolize the Chinese market.

As a consequence, the Japanese government was the first to lift its economic sanctions against the Chinese Communist regime. It was the first to provide, initially in private, then publicly, multiple loans to first to send an official at ministerial level to

has taken entirely the same position on human rights as Chinese Prime Minister Li Peng. Speaking on China, Miyazawa said, Some countries may have pulled themselves out of absolute poverty, and for them, making a living is the most important for that country. Applying an abstract yardstick of human rights to foreign aid would not allow for effective development assis-

In the eyes of the Chinese, the United States and Japan are at two different extremes. In fact, the first spontaneous demonstration against a foreign country since the founding of the People's Republic - a demonstration organized by university students in Beijing and some other cities in September of 1985 — was a protest against the Japanese "economic invasion.

By contrast, the anti-American propaganda carried out by the Chinese Communists for more than four decades has not nists for more than four decades has not been able to dispel the good feelings that the Chinese people have traditionally held for the United States. American support for China's democratic movement in recent years and the limited, yet honest efforts the U.S. government has made in favor of improving Chinese human rights are widely recognized by the Chinese people.

The fact that several thousand political prisoners are indeed held in China's prisons is a forceful counter-attack to Miyazawa's view on human rights. If the Chinese had been content with their existence and had been content with their existence and had not demanded freedom, there would not have been so many people put in jail.

An organized hunger strike by political orisoners is something unheard of in China. Yet, in recent days, 50 political prisoners held in Liaoning Province decided to stage a collective hunger strike demanding the recruel treatment they were made to bear. Such an action, coinciding with Baker visit to China, presents him with an opportu nity to expose the lies contained in the re cent white paper on human rights issued be the Chinese Communists, which boldly as serted: "Political prisoners do not exist

The struggle between pro-Japanese an pro-American factions within the Chines Communist Party did not stop because of the June 4 Tien An Men massacre. In fact, a unprecedented phenomenon has recently of curred: The clashing political views of bot factions have been reported at the same tim by the Chinese media, indicating a content porary struggle among the leadership on the issues of human rights and foreign relations

Additional American pressure on the Ch nese Communists with respect to human rights may meet strong resistance from the hardliners. But it will also serve as encount agement for reformists within the party.

Israeli policy stems from absence of U.S. action

By YEHOSHAFAT HARKABI

JERUSALEM — Israel declared emphatically that the Madrid peace negotiations should begin without prior conditions. However, the continuing establishment of settlements in the West Bank constitutes a tangible prior condition designed to foreclose negotiations on withdrawal from the occupied territories. Without such a withdrawal, peace is not attainable in the Middle

The settlements are not a mere aspect of current Israeli policy. They are an organic part of the governing Likud Party policy that wants to dictate to history that the territories will stay Israeli.

The United States could have called Israel to order in 1970s, long before the mass establishment of settlements. The fateful moment was in 1977, when Menachem Begin took power as Israel's Prime Minister.

His advocacy of de-facto annexation of the occupied territories flew in the face of United Nations Resolution 242, which had been recognized internationally as the only possible basis for settlement of the Arab-Israeli conflict.

That resolution served as the main pillar of American policy in this conflict, and it would not be an exaggeration to say that over the years 242 had acquired the authority and prestige of an international norm.

In the face of Begin's ascent to power, the Jimmy Carter White House became nervous. Aware of Begin's political positions, a crisis of confrontation was in the offing.

This "game plan" presumably referred to preparations by Carter's aides to challenge Begin's position on annexation. During his Washington visit, Begin acquitted himself by declaring that "everything is negotiable." The Americans were relieved, apparently interpreting this as a sign of moderation. But Begin only meant that everything was "talkable," and nothing more. He returned home triumphantly because American diplomacy had won over American statesman-

From then on, Israel's rejection of 242 and its claim to the occupied territories were no longer outlandish. Before Begin's ascent, it had been an ideological position of only one party in the Israeli Knesset. Now it became the official position of the state of Israel.

By refraining from challenging Begin, the American administration unwittingly granted his position political respectability. The Americans were deprived henceforth of the possibility of challenging the Likud policy on the grounds of international norms and international legality.

Preventing a "disastrous encounter" in 1977 only meant that it would be many times more disastrous in the future for all concerned. The American leaders at the time lacked the foresight to grasp this — either they felt perplexed or simply did not care.

Begin's triumphant return from Washington had great importance for Israeli political life. It signaled to Israelis that they should not be too concerned with the external world's opposition to their policy. Even the U.S. gave way and resigned itself to Israeli spurning of the American position. Thus, Israel felt it should not be tormented by misgivings about expansion and settlements in the occupied territories. The Likud's position passed the feasibility test, which helped it to become entrenched in Israeli public

Resolution 242 is now practically discarded by Israel, as can be inferred from U.S. Secretary of State James Baker's demand for Israeli reaffirmation of its acceptance of this resolution. The American position on Israeli withdrawal from the occupied territories has been accompanied by an aversion to elaborating any general conception of what will or should happen in these territories after the withdrawal.

No concrete alternative to the Israeli scheme of retaining the territories was offered by the Americans. This helped nurture a hope in Israel that perhaps, against all odds, the occupied territories would stay

Israel will pay heavily for American squeamishness. It will be justifiably said that Israel brought the suffering on itself by misreading reality and disobeying interna-

Nevertheless, the U.S. will be taken to task on grounds of irresponsibility, political and moral — not only for allowing Israel to sink in the quagmire of a wrong policy that flouted 242, the very basis on which the U.S. says peace must be made. American Jews will probably be found to bear a large share of the blame.

LISBON - The Madrid meeting and the processes leading up to it were a logical consequence of the establishment of a new balance of power in the world and in the Middle East Our first steps on the road to an enduring peace will, I believe, face far fewer obstacles than sor would make us believe. The economic and security dimensions of peace are paramount. It is my conviction that the changes in the world economy have become Israel's main enemy. Israel can no longer survive in isolation, with a long supply line to Europe or the United States. The future holds no promise for small countries building up selfsufficient economies. On the contrary, the trend is toward large, integrated regional economies such as the European Community or North American Free Trade Zone.

This evidence should lead to the realization that the best hope is to be found in an integrated re-

Demo enters governor's race

Candidate concentrates on education, economic development

By VIKKI K. CARLSON Universe Staff Writer

The field of candidates for the 1992 governor's seat construction and leasing firms in Utah. One of their grew again this weekend as developer Kem Gardner

Gardner ran for the Democratic nomination in 1984 against Wayne Owens and lost in the primary. Owens gathered 62 percent of the votes in the primary but lost to Norm Bangerter in the general election.

Now, Gardner is looking for the Democratic nomination again. His competition this time is attorney Stewart Hanson and Byron Marchant. Gardner said he was unprepared in 1984 and now has the support of some of the key people who opposed him seven years ago, namely

'I have a broader base of support now," he said. He is president of the Boyer Co., one of the largest most recent projects was the Utah One Center office building in downtown Salt Lake City

Some of Gardner's priorities in the gubernatorial race include economic development and education. Gardner said he wants to concentrate on marketing

Utah-made products overseas rather than attracting foreign enterprise to the state.

In education, Gardner said he wants to raise Utah educators' pay to the national average and, at the same time, cut class size. He said the state could do this by cutting administrative waste and costs.

Defense files for ban on assault testimony

Associated Press

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla. -William Kennedy Smith's lawyer was ready to call Smith to the stand Monday at his rape trial but first sought assurances that he won't be asked about previous sexual assault allega-

The legal question over Smith's testimony arose after Smith's mother briefly testified and a doctor said a rape couldn't have happened exactly as the accuser described. Defense attorney Roy Black filed a last-minute motion to bar any mention during cross-examination of three women who, after Smith was accused of raping a woman at the Kennedy estate during Easter weekend, came forward and said he attacked them in the 1980s. Those women never reported the incidents and has been called as an expert witness only twice in his career. Circuit Judge Mary Lupo previously rejected prosecutors' attempts to have the three women testify.

"We want to call Mr. Smith as a witness," Black said. "But we want to make sure the state can't open the door on cross-examination and enter evidence the court has ruled irrele-

Lupo said she had decided to forbid any mention of it during cross-examination. But prosecutors complained they had been given no notice of the motion and no opportunity to research legal precedents.

Lupo reluctantly recessed court an hour early to give them time to prepare and said she would hear arguments in the morning before Smith

She suggested it was unlikely she would change her mind.
